

Graphology Test

By
Joel Engel

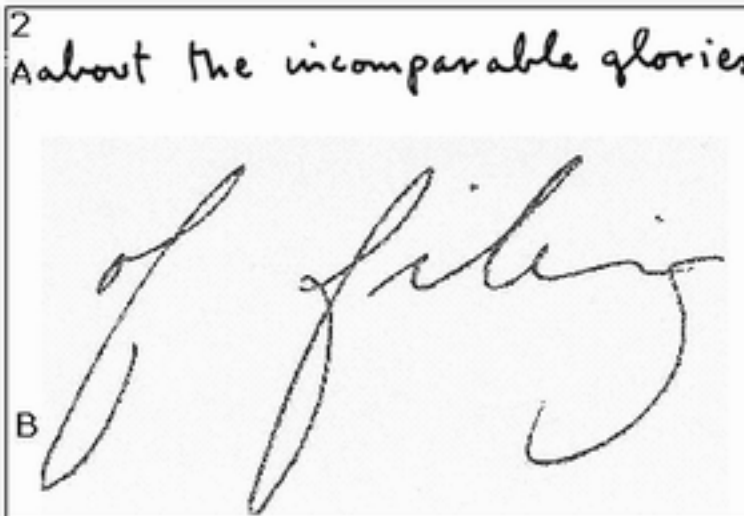

Graphologists are well aware of the controversy that exists regarding the validity of graphology. In a New York Times article, entitled: "What Your Handwriting Says About Your Career," Philip Muskin, a professor of clinical psychiatry at Columbia Medical Center, says he thinks that handwriting analysis can help him gain insight into his patients, and he hopes to use it with them one day. "It's shocking that writing a sentence could reveal character traits," Dr. Muskin said.

In advancing this insight, I present the following test, with the understanding that this will illustrate 'there is something in it.' You be the judge. Please consider the answers and notes.

Answers:

1. A. The writing leans rightward, toward people, B is cool, 'neutral.'
2. B. The lower ('physical') zone is inflated
3. A. The 't' bars are flying (rightward) off their handles
4. A. The 't' bar and 'i' dots are exactly placed; the overall writing is precise
5. A. The base line descends
6. B. As the lines descend, the margin moves rightward-can't wait to get to the end!
7. A. No initial letter has a beginning stroke (President Obama's handwriting)
8. A. The end strokes of the words extend rightward ('giving to the other person')
9. A. This 'garland' writing is round, 'hassle-free,' the easiest type of writing to jot down. (B is angular, rigid and inflexible)
10. B. This writing is smeary (technically called 'pastose') and excessively heavy pressured. Can become uncontrollable.
11. A. The writing is (obviously) ostentatious
12. A. The capital letters (which reflect self-image) are narrow compared to the rest of the writing.
13. B. At this age, only bright children draw triangles.
14. A. The 'i' dot and 't' bar are written ahead (rightward)
15. B. The writing leans rightward (friendly) and the last letters extend rightward (sympathetic). A is leftward and has no last letters that extend rightward-selfish!
16. A. When a woman signs her married name, she reveals her regard for herself and her husband. The first name is how she 'views' herself, the name she acquired reflects the image she has of her husband. A's 'last' name is proportionately larger than her given name. B's is similar.
